HEARTS By HALLIE ERMINE RIVES

Copyright, 1902, by The Bowen-Merrill Company

Armand walked slowly through several side streets to the Red Lion tavern, on Sassafras street, one of the less pretentious inns. Here in a dim parlor on the ground floor waited the occupant of the fine coach which had roused the spleen of Joseph Galloway. His hat was flung on a chair, and he strode up and down, his mustaches bristling with impatience.

"Is this Dr. Franklin?"

As Armand entered he embraced him effusively in the French fashion.
"All goes well," he cried. "I have been discreet and have done all you instructed. The congress has named three members to receive you tomorrow at 1 o'clock. Ventrebleu! With the Declaration hanging fire you may believe how eager they are. I have brought your clothes too. Nom de Dieu!" he exclaimed, holding Armand's arms affectionately. "To know you were in a British prison! Thank God you escaped their clutches, and just in the nick of time too! You shall tell me about it one day."

"Pillars!" Armand broke in upon the other's chatter. "Pillars! The letter! I have not got it!"
"Not got it?" Pillars repeated in amazed surprise.
"No. I sent it here to Philadelphia to Dr. Franklin. I did not tell you this, since I expected to find it here. Well, I have seen Dr. Franklin, and it has not been delivered."

Pillars' face was a study of dismay. "And what will you do?"
Armand had no time to reply, for at that moment there came a knock at the door, and it opened.
Instantly Pillars bent low in a series of bows to Armand.
"Accept my most profound salutations, monseigneur," he said in tones of elaborate ceremony. "I shall be pleased to accompany you on your distinguished errand tomorrow afternoon."

"M. Pillars," said Armand easily, "this is my good friend, Captain Jarret. Au revoir, monseigneur—jusqu'à demain!"

CHAPTER XV.
MORE than one along the south road that sultry morning of July 4 turned to gaze after a fair-haired girl who passed upon a lead-white horse, with a negro boy behind her astride a sorrel. Yellow and just splashed Anne's olive cloak as she rode into the town, and yellow dust clung to John the Baptist's wool.

How many leagues? She would have been worn but for the purpose that buoyed her up. She rode some way, paying as little heed to the sparse groups along the streets or to the few painted Indians lounging with their petry in the squares as to the beetle browsed roofs or the wooden statuary in the pretentious yards.
Her thoughts were busy with the past. They flew back to that night at Gladden Hall, her last view of Armand, when Jarret's troopers had dragged him away; to the flight of Dunmore and his family, his wanton burning of Norfolk with his rabble of runaway slaves, and the last fight at Gwyn's island, whence the impotent earl, with his brutal aid, Captain Foy, sailed away to the north, never again to set foot upon Virginia soil; to her anguished wonder as to Armand's fate meanwhile. Even Henry's return from the Second congress, the news that Colonel Washington had been elected commander in chief of colonial forces and the glorious outcome of his long siege of Boston had not been able to cheer her.

She thought of the long hours she had watched by the bedside of the bondswoman with grave faced Dr. Craik watching her slow return to life; of the still longer days when she had sat by the listless figure who only stared leaden eyed and with brain pitifully dulled to hear asked over and over again with desperate earnestness that same question, "Where is it—can't you remember?"—a question met always with the same result; of the long, fruitless search, the unreasoning faith in him that would not yield to recital or argument and finally the lucky accident which had given her the clew to the packet's hiding place.
She had started the selfsame day, taking John the Baptist with her, leaving a hurried message for her uncle and aunt, who were then away in Richmond. And this, the twelfth day thereafter, found her on her journey's end riding into the wide, clean thoroughfares of Philadelphia.

"Miss Annie!"—John the Baptist's solemn drawl broke her reverie—"dat yaller boy at de pinner mek ev'body ekal. De dat mean we niggers gwine ter be white lak you, or is y'all gwine ter be black lak me?"

But Anne had no answer.
Going toward High street, her course lay by the open green on which the new statehouse fronted. She noticed that the pavements were almost deserted and found herself thinking wonderingly that the streets of Richmond were noisier.

It was with a start of surprise that on turning a corner by the green she pulled up without warning on the skirts of a great hushed crowd, well ordered, moving restlessly under tree that sheltered with locusts.

Most of those nearer the front were gentry. They walked back and forth slowly, tramping the blue thistles and whortleberry bushes. Next there was a stratum of the trading and working classes. No wonder the weathermen chanted jeered them, for they wore trousers of coarse drill, even leather jerkins, and some carried tools. Here was a group of weavers from Germantown, and not far away a knot of Swedes from Wicaco. The older men among these wore leggings and skin coats.

On the outskirts of all, here and there, holding themselves aloof, walked stately, heavier figures in small clothes of rich velvets and satins and wearing powdered wigs.

They carried irritable looks, these "Pennsylvania lords," as the bitter Adams called them. It was bad weather for Tories. From the yard of Clarke's inn, across the street, they looked askance at the workmen, passing sneering allusions to the representatives from Massachusetts, angered at the assumption of legislative powers by men clearly of more humble blood than themselves.

They saw the cannon in position by the statehouse and the Continental flags fluttering from the shipping in the harbor. They knew that in the nearby woods five battalions of Associators, drilled and armed, were awaiting any outcome. They knew that the people were ready, if only their leaders should choose.

Anne upon her tired horse looked with wonder at this earnest, quiet crowd and thrilled with a new sense of the dignity of the assemblage within those brick walls. The heat was shimmering, and she had thrown open the thin cloak she wore, showing a flash of crimson waist with a sheen of metal buttons.

Mordecai Floyd, looking on near by, gazed on her with pursed lips.
"Small wonder," he said grimly, "that unrighteousness doth overwhelm the children of the world and move them to wrath when we see all about us the testimony of unbelief. Lust of the eye, Friend Joseph; lust of the eye!"

Joseph Galloway, standing by him, looked at the girl, so straight and young and bright hued; then his crafty look returned. "Consider the lilies of the field," he quoted with unction as he took snuff.
"I doubt not," pursued the Quaker, wagging his pow, "twas designed to cast a slur upon the vanity of apparel since 'tis a thing of so little estimation in the sight of God that he bestows it in the highest degree upon the meanest of his creatures. 'Tis to be presumed that, were it a thing of worth in itself, instead of bestowing colors, gildings and broderies upon tulips, he had bestowed them upon creatures of higher dignity. To mankind he hath given but sparingly of gaudy features, a great part of them being black, a great part of them being tawny and a great part being of other man and dusky complexions, showing that 'tis not the outward adornment that he wishes, but the appearing in supplication for the ornamenting of the Spirit."

"Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these!" intoned his companion smoothly. "But I must be going, Mordecai. I have an errand at the tavern."

"Hast thou heard aught more of the message to the congress from France?" the Quaker inquired in a low voice as he clasped the other's fervid palm.

Galloway put his lips closer to the other's ear, and a glutinous chuckle shook his jaw.
"Mordecai," he said, "I dreamed last night that France had an ax to grind. Wouldn't it be curious if the message didn't tickle the congress so much after all? Ho, ho!"

Anne's first inquiry provoked a smile from the bystanders. Dr. Franklin? Yes, he was doubtless in the hall, but to see him! Quite impossible! And a lady too. At a recess she might succeed, but not now. "Who could tell but he was on the floor at that moment?"

So she rode on. At High street she inquired for an inn, as she had been in the saddle since dawn and the horses were jaded. Learning that the principal ones were all full owing to the presence of the delegates, she found her way to one of the more humble hostleries on another street. It was the Red Lion tavern.

The place seemed well high deserted. Had she known the significance of this day's sitting of the congress she would have understood. As it was, finding no host in evidence, she went into the parlor and sat down to await his appearance.
And, sitting so, from the hall and coming nearer she heard the well remembered voice of Jarret.
A panic seized her. The packet—it was in the lining of her cloak at that moment. He must not see her! She looked wildly about her, but there was no door of escape. In desperation she ran to the deep-set window. It was shut, but there were shallow curtains across the alcove, and she shrunk behind them as the door flew open.

Jarret came in noisily. One of the inn servants was at his heels.
"I would speak with monseigneur," he said. "Request him to be so good as to honor me here." He stood smiling at the servant went, and Anne watched him from between the curtains with fascinated gaze.
"At last!" he muttered. "The final stroke, and still all goes well. If Armand succeeds for us, then advancement and favor for me. The king must reward me, for the plan was mine alone."

"Armand!" Anne's heart had given a great leap. Jarret knew where he was, what he did. "If he succeeds for us, what then?"
Again a step in the hall, again the door opened, a scraping servant said, "Monseigneur," and again Anne's heart leaped, for the man who stood on the threshold clad in a full costume of purple velvet was Armand. Armand, but sparer of feature, with shadows beneath the eyes. Yet they looked out with all their old nobility and with a strange fire. She knew now where she had seen that fire—it was in Henry's face—the fire of steadfast purpose that knows no quenching.

Armand! Escaped from Dunmore's clutches, safe and in Philadelphia! She wanted to rush out to him, to cry to him that she had done the best she could, had come to fulfill her promise at last. But what did he with Jarret?

"So!" the latter said. "As bravely trimmed as ever. 'Tis the dress of a prince."

"My good Armand has the best of taste." On Armand's face was a strange smile.

"You have cozened him beautifully. I doubt not he expects reimbursement from his king."

"My king," corrected Armand softly. "Keep it up," laughed Jarret. "Tis never forgetting makes a good play actor. Faith, it minds me of the old Virginia days. Then you posed as only a marquis. We rise in the world. Yesterday in a prison cell at Halifax, to-day this little plain, release, and presto, behold Louis' secret envoy. Well, you are near to the purchase of your pardon. The time is almost here. A half hour more and you will enter the statehouse. You lack not assurance. Here is the letter you will deliver to the congress."

Armand took the paper he handed him and put it in his breast.

"Tis signed with De Vergennes' name, of course," went on Jarret, "and 'tis a clever enough forgery to trick even Poor Richard for the time being. Aid in return for territorial compensation—now if 'twere only Louis XV! 'Twould be like the old skiffing. Me thinks 'twill be a wet blanket to allay this fever for a Declaration. 'Twill suffice to tide over till these patriot addle pates come to their senses."

Anne's mind was in a clamor, a hideous, nameless clamor of surprises, from which a single fact stood out with the clearness of a black silhouette etched on white paper—Armand, not escaped, but released—released—going before the congress with a lying message, a message of discouragement—going now, this very hour, and the plot was Jarret's.
It was for a single heart beat as if the sun were darkened, as if all joy were blotted from the universe. Then, peering out, she saw his eyes, and the bitter scene at Gladden Hall rose to her like a vision. She saw him dragged away, and with the vision she felt—strong, triumphant—the terrible joyful rebellion of her own belief in him that would not doubt.

"I could not have devised it better myself," Jarret was speaking again. "There is not a soul in congress who could recognize you as the Louis Armand seized at Williamsburg. Luckily, Henry is in the Virginia convention. The devil holds cards with us."

"And this," said Armand, as if to himself, "has been the devil's deal."
"Ay!" But 'tis time for us to start. Pillars will be there by now." He consulted his watch. "Ten minutes to ride thither. I have horses at the door. I shall go with you as one of your suit. Luckily, I shall not be known. I must not miss the delight of recounting this interesting event in detail in Virginia. Can you guess," with a malign smile, "to whom in-ex-pec-tal, monseigneur?"

A red flush leaped into Armand's cheek, and his teeth clinched convulsively. It was as if a great wave of passion lashed the man and left him tense and white. His tone, however, remained as low as ever.

"You hound!" he said. "You prowling wolf of the dark, who know no truth, no trust, no faith; who, being vile, think all else vile the same! Thank God that to that one—to her—my honor was always unstained! She believe you? No! Never! I go alone to the congress! You go no farther with me!"

A facial contortion drew Jarret's lips from his teeth. He stood in a leaning posture, his knuckles flat upon the table between them, a thriving suspicion in his look. A fit of shuddering seized Anne as she saw this look change swiftly to conviction—certainty in which rage and shame and hate were black.
"I go no farther!" he repeated. "What say you? Oh, fool, fool that I was to trust you! You have tricked me! You never intended to do it! You will not go—aye, you would go, but wherefore?" His voice had sunk to a metallic dullness, and he eyed the other, breathing hard.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deeply hidden. It is the cause of many sudden deaths. It is caused by it—lung disease, pneumonia, apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance, the kidneys will attack the vital organs, causing catarrh of the bladder, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell. Bladder troubles almost always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

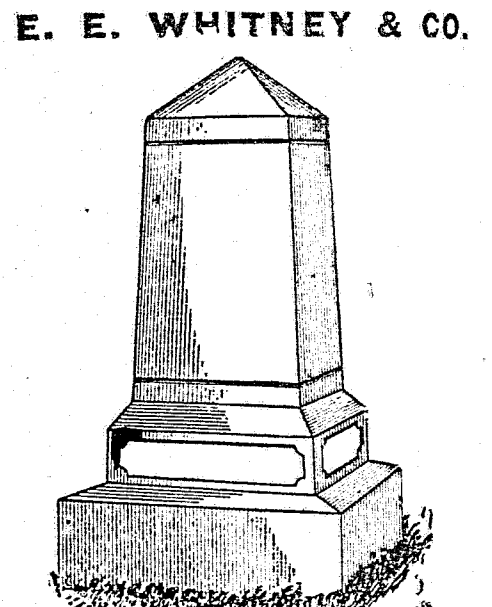

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this advertisement in this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

The Four-Leaved Clovers.

I know a place where the sun is like gold, And the cherry-blossoms burst with snow; And down underneath the loveliest nook, Where the four-leaved clovers grow. One leaf is for Faith, and one is for Hope, And the third is for Love, you know. And God put another one in for Luck; If you search, you'll find where they grow. But you must have Hope, and you must have Faith, You must Love and be strong; and so, If you work, if you wait, you'll find the place Where the four-leaved clovers grow.

The Whip-Poor-Will's Shoe.

BORTENSE GARDNER GRACE. Far down in the wooded marshes, Where the brooklet wandered through, In the dawning days of summer I found a golden shoe. 'Twas a gem entwined with sunbeams, None like in field or wood. With its leaty emerald setting, This dainty thing of gold. Afar the gay red-wing warbled His silvery "Con-quer-ee!" The spring was vanquished winter And sweet days were to be. I stooped low with eager fingers To part the slender stem. When softly a whisper came to me: "O spare our flower-gem!" I paused in a half-guilty wonder— The pine trees sighed and moaned, And the happy bird-notes ceased. Seemed changed, and sadder toned. O, I longed for the treasure golden, 'Twas hardly hard to stay. But I left it there in beauty To smile its life away. And the world grew fairer and brighter, All nature sang to me. In the distant nook of the red-wing: "Con-quer, con-quer!" *The yellow lady's slipper.

Hearts Courageous.

Now his tone leaped again: "I know! The French king had his own mind! He sent your master a message to convey a message of comfort. Ah, your face says, 'Aye!' 'Twas in the packet you gave to Mistress Tillotson at Glad-den Hall! Curse that bondwoman! You have got it! Now that you are false to us, 'tis that message—that message that you would give the congress! And 'twas I brought you from the jail—'!"

The last words were a sort of horrible rasping whisper, and as he spoke he came slowly around the table, his fingers clanking his edge.

"But you shall not! You double traitor! You shall not go! I know you—I alone! I will prevent it!"

"You shall never leave this room," said Armand.

Crouched low, holding the shalloon edges, Anne saw it all, the breath fro

Annie saw both blades clasp out. zen in her throat—saw both blades clasp out with a single movement, saw Jarrat hurl himself forward, heard the steel meet. Mixed joy and horror held her.

She understood. He had cherished his master's purpose all along, pursued by treachery, meeting cunning with cunning, constrained to deception. It was the true message of the French king that she clasp at that moment under her cloak. To carry this he had won his way from the hands of his enemies and fooled Jarrat to his purpose. And now without the packet his voice would give the message to the congress. She had brought it just in time.

All this came to her at once in a succession of pictures vivid as patches of night landscape seen by violet lightning and at an instant when horror over-rolled her joy.

The street, the taproom, were so near. Would none come to stop them? She feared to declare herself, for a start, a tremor of the hand, might mean death to her lover.

She saw the quick end, powerless to utter a cry. Armand stiffened suddenly, his left hand fallen low. His blade passed like a needle in salicloth through the other's body, and Jarrat slipped in a huddle to the floor and lay still.

Anne tried to scream, but her throat only gave forth a whisper. Not till Armand had sheathed his wet sword and the door had closed upon him did she find strength to part the curtains.

She looked upon the prostrate man in a terror. She must summon help and then take the packet to Armand. She realized suddenly that Jarrat was not dead; that his eyes were upon her; that he was struggling to a sitting posture.

"You saw—you heard!" he gasped. "You!"

"Yes," she breathed. "You brought him the packet! My God! To think I never suspected! And he has gone—gone!"

"To his honor."

He stared at her, a slow, ghastly smile coming to yreathen his lips: "L. Whit-mor? Say you so? Wait!"

He made an attempt to unbutton his waistcoat. "The paper in this pocket!" he groaned. "Take it and read. Quick! Quick! Nay, call no one! Men bleed not to death so soon!"

She unfolded the scroll with shaking fingers and read:

I, Louis Armand, released from du-rance in Halifax, under special instruction from his majesty's government touching the Continental congress, do agree that, in the event that I do not carry out this mission, as ordered, I hold my life forfeit and pledge my honor within one month this hereafter to deliver myself to Lord Chetwynde, whose custody I now leave.

ARMAND.

She caught her breath. "Do pledge my honor to deliver myself!"—"to hold my life forfeit." He had chosen to give his life to carry the true message. His life! How clear that was to her! He must not do it! Oh, if God would only help her to think! He must not do it! She heard Jarrat's, breathing through it all and felt his eyes, flinching, upon her.

A heavy knocking came at the door, and Joseph Galloway entered, his stick in his hand. He made an exclamation as he saw and threw up his hands.

"Galloway!" said the wounded man, his breath rattling with a convulsion as the other bent over him. "He is false to us. Armand—he is false! He did this. He is gone to the congress you must stop him!"

"Yes, yes, I will call a leech. 'Tis not a mortal thrust, man. I will go to the hall. But how to do it? Proofs?"

"She!"—gasped Jarrat in a final effort, pointing to Anne. "She!"—and lapsed into ashen unconsciousness.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE white walled, high ceiled anteroom, was barely furnished with padlocked chairs and a small iron-legged table. A high desk used sometimes by the colony's chief justice of the supreme court was at one end, with doors on either side. The other end of the room opened in narrow arches between pillars into the wide paved hall of the statehouse. Across these pillars was stretched a heavy cloth curtain, through whose folds sounds from the corridor reached dull and muffled.

Beyond these curtains on the opposite side of the hall was a great double door, and through the heavy oak came voices in debate and an occasional high note like the metallic rap of a gavel. But in the anteroom this became only a distant hum like that of settling bees.

Armand, clad as for a court levee, stood one side erect and smiling before a trio of sober coated figures in duffle gray. His long, brown, rippling hair, the rare lace at his throat, the jade hint of his dress sword, made him as distinct as some brilliant hued insect among gray moths. Beside him, uniformed, his mustachios aggressive as ever, short, wiry and alert, stood Pir-arne.

The NEW YORK WORLD

THREE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Read Wherever the English Language is Spoken.

The Thrice-a-Week World long ago established itself in public favor, and it is now recognized as the strongest publication of its kind in the United States. Advertisers and publishers seeking club-bing combinations—and they know best—universally testify to this. It is widely circulated in every State and Territory of the Union, and even in remote South Africa and on the gold fields in the deserts of Australia. These are the things that tell.

This year we have the Presidential campaign, in which all Americans are deeply interested. Already the issues are being discussed and the two great parties are preparing for the first time. You will not want to miss any details, and if you subscribe now your year's subscription will cover the campaign from beginning to end.

The Thrice-a-Week World is absolutely fair in its political news. Partisan bias is never allowed to affect its news columns, and Democrat and Republican alike can obtain in its pages truthful accounts of all the great political contests.

In addition to all the news, the Thrice-a-Week World furnishes the best serial fiction, elaborate market reports and other features of interest.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription is only $1.00 per year, and this pays for 15¢ papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and Norway AD-vertiser together for $2.20.

Prohibition Sheriff Candidate.

Mr. George R. Morton of South Paris was recently nominated as candidate for Sheriff in Oxford county, and a sketch of his life is not out of place at this time. Mr. Morton is the son of Henry F. and Lucella (Forbes) Morton. His father was widely known as the originator, and until his death in 1900, the general manager of the Paris Manufacturing Company—Oxford county's largest wood-working establishment.

George R. Morton was born at West Sumner in 1888, and received his education in the schools of Paris and at Hebron and Fryeburg academies, and after graduating with honors from these institutions he entered the employ of the West End Street Railway, in Boston, and was for some years receiver and chief clerk of Brookline Division of that company. The fact of his being several times promoted from one position to another by this great corporation, where competitors for these positions were numerous, is sufficient proof of his efficiency and business ability.

By industry and economy he accumulated quite a sum of money, and returned to Paris in 1897, and purchased an interest in the Paris Manufacturing Company and was that year elected treasurer. On the death of his father in 1900 he was elected general manager, both of which positions he has since held with credit to himself and profit to the company.

He has never been actively engaged in the politics of the state or county, but has always been identified with the Republican party, but his well-known stand on the temperance question and his views regarding the strenuous enforcement of the prohibitory law and opposition to the question of re-submission attracted the attention of the Prohibition party and has led to his nomination for the position of sheriff of this county. It is not claiming too much to say that no one is better fitted to fill this important office than is Mr. Morton, and that his reputation as a sound business man and a man of high moral character, and decided views on the temperance question would insure a good, clean administration and enforcement, not only of our temperance laws but of all our laws, and this fact, so necessary to our peace and prosperity, should appeal loudly to the voters of Oxford county at the coming election.

WEST STONEHAM.

A Smart Elderly Man.
Capt. Ephraim McKee, who is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Sophrona McAllister of North Lovell, will figure as one of the smart old men of Oxford county. He was 90 years old last March and wishing to visit his old friends and neighbors he walked the whole distance of three miles and then traveled around among his friends. He retains his mental faculties to a remarkable degree and is very interesting in conversation. His memory is impaired but little for a man of his age. He is very cheerful and can crack jokes with the best of them.

W. W. Durgin is visiting friends in Stow.

William Gammon is building a cottage near the Adams cottage.

The hot, windy days and cold nights are drying up the ground and the farmers are wishing for rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Hilton of East Waterford made a short visit at her paternal home last Wednesday.

Wendall Flanders and Olystan McAllister of Norway visited their uncle, H. B. McKee, a few days last week.

Mrs. Abbie McKee of North Lovell spent the day last Saturday with her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Sawyer.

Judging by the tone of the scholars our school must be progressing finely. Miss Butters is experienced and one of the best teachers.

DENMARK.

Frank Osgood and Minot Brazier of Hiram were in town, Saturday last.

Elwood Pandexter came home from Greenwood, Mass. Monday to spend two weeks vacation at home.

Henry Warren's family of Cornish have been visiting at her father's and other relatives the past week.

BETHEL.

Oxford Universalists in Convention.
The semi-annual convention of the Oxford county Universalists held at Bethel two days last week was a largely attended series of meetings, both from the parishes outside of Bethel and locally. The weather was ideal.

There are sixteen churches in the association, and practically all were represented. Careful preparation was made by the local parish, and in every way the meetings were successful. Sessions began Wednesday morning, with address of welcome by Rev. A. D. Olson and response by J. H. Barrows, president of the association.

In the afternoon was a sermon by Rev. Marcia W. Selman, pastor of the Canton church. Addresses were given by George L. Merrill of Dixfield, on Sunday school work, and Rev. F. E. Barton on the Young People's Christian Unioning service specially fine music was given by Mrs. H. E. Wilson, of South Paris, Rev. Stanford Mitchell of Rumford Falls, and Prof. W. S. Wright.

An extremely interesting, helpful and inspiring sermon was preached by Rev. W. J. Taylor, of Lewiston, "The Hope of Immortality." A reception was given to visitors with refreshments and a brief entertainment.

Thursday morning under the charge of E. C. Park, esq., a symposium was held on the Influence of Ideals, and some splendid thoughts were brought out by Rev. Stanford Mitchell, and was original both as to matter and form. In the afternoon, sermons by Rev. Gertrude Barle of Dover and Rev. Isabella S. MacDuff of Berlin, together with a closing address by Rev. W. J. Taylor as a summary of the convention.

Resolutions were adopted heartily endorsing the prohibitory law and opposing re-submission, one calling on parents to educate the children in moral and spiritual things, and one urging greater spiritual devotion in the work.

The next meeting is in October, the place not yet decided.

Two Deaths.

Frank W. Barrett, aged 61, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. E. Abbott, on High street, Tuesday afternoon, the 21st. He has been sick about six months and during that time has received the best of care, all that any daughter could bestow with a family of two small children to care for. The funeral was Thursday, the remains were carried to West Paris for burial. Mr. Barrett was born in Paris.

Ariel T. Carver passed away last Sunday at his home on Grover Hill. He has been failing for the past year with malaria poisoning and heart disease. He was 59 years of age and a soldier of the Civil War, and a member of the G. A. R. Post of Stoneham. The burial was at Woodlawn cemetery, Tuesday forenoon.

Wednesday morning brought a blessing in the form of a fine shower, the first we have had for weeks. Crops were dry and in sore need of rain.

In the free trip to the Exposition offered by the editor of the Bethel News, Lyman Wheeler was the only one of the four workers who succeeded in getting the 16,000 votes as required. He has been very persevering and brought in a great deal new work for the News.

KEZAR FALLS.

Children's Day.
Children's Day was one of the loveliest in the gift of June. In the morning, the pastor addressed the children, taking for his text, "Consider the Lilies," which was very beautiful and the crowded faces of the children. In the evening the following program was successfully given:

Processional—The Sounds of Summer.....
Anthem—The Feast of Pentecost.....
Declaration—Children's Day, We Love Thee.....
Duet.....
Dialogue—Twirl Blossom as the Rose.....
Monologue—Boynton, Jessie Morrison.....
Recitation—Blanche Kelly, Cathie Stacy, Edna Sales, Lillian Ridlon.....
Wendell Flanders and Olystan McAllister of Norway visited their uncle, H. B. McKee, a few days last week.

Judging by the tone of the scholars our school must be progressing finely. Miss Butters is experienced and one of the best teachers.

Frank Osgood and Minot Brazier of Hiram were in town, Saturday last.

Elwood Pandexter came home from Greenwood, Mass. Monday to spend two weeks vacation at home.

Wedding Reception.

Saturday evening, June 18th, Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose B. Farnum held their wedding reception at their pleasant home in Northwest Norway, over one hundred guests being present, among which were Michael Losier and family, from Bethel, also their friend, J. F. Harrington. Mrs. V. E. Dunn and Fred Dunn served as ushers.

The bride was attired in a beautiful gown of silver gray silk, richly trimmed with Irish point lace and Persian trimming.

The rooms were very tastefully decorated with primroses, ferns and wild flowers. The evening was very much enjoyed by all, both young and old. Little Amy Losier entertained them at a short time with her phonograph, then the young people enjoyed a few old-time games in the kitchen and on the lawn, after which was served a nice treat of ice cream and cake in abundance, and later Mr. Farnum passed the cigars.

The table was heavily laden with beautiful and useful gifts as follows:

HEBRON.

Hebrons Win, 4 to 2.

Hebron and Oxford played a very interesting game of ball at Oxford, Saturday, resulting in a victory for Hebron by a score of 4 to 2.

Hebron started out in the third inning by taking the lead and held it through out. The game was contested by clean, snappy fielding-Dwyer, Chase and Pike excelling for Hebron, V. Bearce and Lanagan for Oxford. Adams pitched a good game for Oxford, striking out 13 men, but was hit where he pitched. Sparks pitched out but 4 men. He held them down to 6 hits and at critical times was a puzzle.

This was a great game for Hebron being the first of their summer schedule and shows that they will have a strong team to meet all comers with this summer. The score was as follows:

Hebron		Oxford

LOVELL.

Frank H. Swett.

The remains of Frank H. Swett, who died at Hahnemann Hospital, New York Jan. 20, were brought here from Forest Hills for interment and the last rites rendered on Saturday afternoon by members of Portland Commandery Knights of Columbus, W. S. Eaton, Eminent Commander, Dr. S. C. Gordon, L. W. Tobes, T. P. Shaw, C. J. Farrington, H. R. Virgins, C. T. Ogden, Prelate J. C. Small and F. H. Palmer. Escort duty was done by Delta Lodge F. & A. M., of Lovell.

Mr. Swett, as past master of Atlantic Lodge of Portland, was the youngest man who had received that honor. He was High Priest of Greenleaf Chapter and Junior Warden of Portland Commandery, when he removed to Boston, being the recipient of two beautiful jewels, presented by the lodge and chapter on his retirement from office in these bodies.

He was a member of the board of officers of the old Mercantile Library Association and when that was united with the Portland Institute and Public Library was made a life member.

Mr. Swett in Portland, he entered the employ of Lovell & Senter, as a young man and became familiar in both theory and practice with the watch making and jewelry business.

In 1880 he moved to Boston, having been associated with the "Cale & Towne Mfg. Co., as an expert and agent, and continued thus until his death. He traveled extensively in their interest, making acquaintances and friends with the banking community in almost all parts of the country.

He was suffering ill health he traveled in Europe six months and upon his return he located in Lovell, remaining from six to nine months of each year.

The people of the place learned to know and love the man. They noted his love of right, his scorn of all that was wrong. They saw his deeds of kindness and heard his words of cheer. They observed his loyalty to the place and his desire for the best interest of the people. They felt his influence in the cause of art, morals, education and religion.

They were looking expectantly for his return with the spring, but he comes only "to enter that green tent whose curtain never outward swings," and is laid gently to rest in the place of his own choosing, where the western mountains, fitting emblems of his character, watch so grandly, and at the east the murmuring pines, he so well loved, whisper of the rest that comes to such as he.

CHOKING CATARRH CURED.

Your Money Back if Hyomei Does Not Cure You.

"I have Hyomei and am cured of catarrh," is what all who have tried it for that disease say to their friends.

It is the easiest thing in the world to stop catarrh at its beginning if you use Hyomei. Just breathe the health-giving, balsamic air for a few minutes and your catarrh will be cured.

In this city and neighboring towns, there are hundreds who can testify to the remarkable powers of Hyomei to cure catarrh. Many of the staunchest friends of this remedy to-day began its use with little hope that they would be cured, but as Hyomei Drug Store offered to refund the money if it did not cure, they decided to try it on that plan, and were soon restored to health.

Graduatin'

Sis is going to graduate. Mother works till after late; Got a lot of women too; Guess they never will get through. Genuineness, when they all come; Row that old machine does hum! Every woman sits and sews, Makin' graduatin' cloze.

Sis is going to graduate; Things is in an offit state; Cloze is piled up 8 feet deep; Ain't no place to eat or sleep. Things is lying on the elctron; Table, bed and everywhere; Every place a feller goes Has to keep away from cloze.

Sis is going to graduate; She's shoppin' at a fearful rate; Dayin' has an' cloze an' shoes; Lace an' handkerchiefs—jest sloughs. Never gets to school no more; Graduatun' is such a bore; Keeps her busy makin' bows For her graduatin' cloze.

Sis is going to graduate; Jest it must be somethin' great! Relatives'll all be here; Strighin' in fr'm far an' near; Sushin' in an' runnin' out; Can't find what it's all about. But from what I see I s'pose Graduatun' jest means cloze.

"Sweet Joys of Childhood."

When living's too elaborate With ceremonies rife, When vague conventionalities Are smothering the life, And soul and aspirations, And naturalness and truth From most of life's relations, It is time to turn to youth. For children, when they're young enough—

Sec'd all that's artificial, With frank, outspoken eloquence Most truly beneficial To any and every weary hearts, So let them play or quarrel, For honest refreshment And it must be truly moral.

Then let them poke rebellious tongues From out distorted faces, Show naughty words with sturdy lungs In all life's market-places, Let Candor rule their early years, (Oh, it is forbidden), Fertil the age when etiquette Shall bid them keep it hidden.

CORA M. W. GREENE, L.A.R.

The Man Who Wouldn't Sell His Corn.

Edmund C. Meguire, a native of New Gloucester, Maine, was the first settler of West Poland, then known as Barkers Town.

He came through Raymond and over Black Cat to Johnson hill. Not liking either soil or situation he climbed a tall tree and away to the North, across a deep ravine, he spied that fine ridge of land which to this day bears his name, Meguire Hill. He hastened down and, crossing the ravine, met the shore of Lake Thompson about dark. He constructed a cheap camp and bed of hemlock boughs, built a fire, shot a couple of birds, which he broiled on the point of his ram-rod, and by the help of a few biscuits from his haversack he made a good supper.

He then lay him down on his cheap pallet where entertained by the peep of frogs or the sharp bark of a fox, the distant howl of a wolf or the scream of a bear he slept soundly till morning. At daybreak he began to rattle round to find the best place to settle, that being the purpose for which he came. Selecting the most favorable location, he felled a small opening, built a log camp and returned to Gloucester.

In a few weeks he returned, accompanied by William and Mark Emery who married his sisters. They were fitted for the occasion, meaning business. They felled and burned several acres, each on his claim selected, built a log cabin and returned to their families filled with courage.

About the middle of January following they were ready to move to their new home. The weather was bitter cold with plenty of snow, and the journey was to be made with teams. William Emery, beside his wife, had five small children and people predicted that they must perish with the cold.

Richard Tripp had bought a lot of land, the proprietor agreeing to receive baskets for his pay, at the making of which, Tripp was an expert. "Make them big as you please," said the proprietor, "I'll take 'em." The first one he made to fit an ox sled with a tight fitting cover, its capacity said to have been about thirty bushels. William borrowed this and packing the entire family in straw and bedding they had a long but comfortable ride.

His basket is said to be still in existence and owned by one of the Emery family in the town of Northboro, N. H.

If the other two grew weary and lagged behind as was sometimes the case, he would seize a stout limb, carry it along with him till they came within reach, then let it go generally hitting either one or both a smart blow in the face, not only reviving their spirits but causing them to utter exclamations hardly allowable in genteel society.

Becoming tired of this they concluded to build a boat. With this they were

Well, the three teams arrived there safely near nightfall. The tired oxen were housed in a log hovel well prepared beforehand and plenty of good hay in stock out the summer before.

By the help of a rousing fire and what bed clothes they brought with them helped out by several bear and deer skins, they passed a comfortable night. Next morning all were up before break of day for breakfast of corn cakes, maple sugar and fried meat, all of which they had in plenty. Soon as daybreak all was hurry and bustle. Each family was in haste to fit their humble homes for both comfort and convenience. This was soon accomplished and then felling the mighty forests and clearing the land.

The ensuing season they raised big crops of corn and grain all on burnt land, but in this they suffered great inconvenience as there was no grinding mill any where within reach, so they had a big mortar made from the butt of a log. In this they crushed their corn and grain and made what they called samp (getting the name from the Indians).

At last a grinding and saw mill was built at East Otisfield by David Ray and though it was a tiresome journey through the deep forest, over rocky hills and deep gullies, they resolved to patronize the new mill.

The journey consumed two days so they had to stop over night with uncle David who always made them welcome. Their load generally comprised four bushels. William and Mark each carried a bushel, while Edmund who was considered a giant had two bushels. He was a man of great energy and pluck, leading off on every occasion.

able to take a big load to the Bean cave, now so called, at the extremity of the lake only a short distance from the mill. Others soon followed these settlers, all stalwart, industrious people.

Many improvements were introduced and they soon had quite a desirable community. In the meantime Edmund had purchased the big island in Lake Thompson, it being covered with a heavy growth of heavy timber and in area comprising 40 acres.

The best of the timber was cut and put into the lake to be rafted to Rays mill and then the entire neighborhood turned out to assist in clearing the land which if they got a good burn was to be planted to corn entire. Planting corn as grain on a burn was very different from the present method and easily and cheaply done.

With a narrow bladed hoe they struck a sharp blow in the scurf, lifted the patch, dropped in the seed, then let it fall back, then gave several smart blows with the eye of the hoe and it was done. As to hoeing all that was required was to go between the rows and cut out the big weeds.

This was planted during the spring of 1810, ever known as the cold, dry season. The crops were almost entirely cut off by frequent and heavy frosts except some of the more hardy vegetables. But not so with the corn. South of being in proximity to very deep water, besides numerous piles of brands and junks left in huge piles which were fired during the coldest nights destroying the effect of the frost in consequence of which the virgin soil produced a heavy crop.

Soon as it became matured, it was pitched upon by wild birds and beasts, making fine hunting for coons, birds and an occasional bear. But the neighbors turned out and the entire crop, fodder, and all was carried to the main-land not far distant on an old mud scow called a gundalow.

Soon as it was noised abroad that Edmund had several hundred bushels of sound corn several speculators came to buy it offering a big price, but met a flat denial. "No," said he "I have no corn to sell. If you have money, you may have it with the island and those who raise corn and ship it to your part. My duty is to my poor neighbors who are destitute and have so kindly assisted me in clearing my land and harvesting the crop."

The winter following was extremely cold and rough. Anticipating what was to come, he had his cattle well slaughtered, as they termed it, just to save their lives.

Many families were without any kind of bread, subsisting on milk, maple sugar and fish from the lake. One dear old mother used to tell us of this fearful time, they being without bread for several days. The eldest child would take his mother by the finger, lead her to the pantry, point to the shelves and murmur, "ma, ma," which often brought tears to her eyes. She would give him a lump of maple sugar of which she had plenty and a drink of milk, being the only food she had. But a pleasant surprise awaited her. She espied uncle Edmund's boy with a horse and a bushel of meal.

The boy tugged it into the room saying, "Father sends you this with his blessing." Towards the lake she spied her husband and Isaiah Dunn, each bearing a string of fine trout.

"Have the Heavens opened upon us?" exclaimed Dunn. "Upon us?" retorted his wife, "We have nothing but fish." "Yes you have," replied mother, "You will share with us while it lasts."

An old-fashioned Johnny cake was soon smoking on the table beside a platter of fried fish. This with a good cup of tea and an abundance of maple sugar and honey made every heart glad. In this way Edmund disposed of his corn. Never sold a bushel for money, loved it, gave it as he pleased, as he deemed it most prudent. He was ever looked upon as the father of the town and died in the prime of life, loved and venerated by all who knew him.

And though confined to the humble walks of life, his name deserves mention among the heroes of earth. A plain marble slab marks his resting place on the very spot where he cut the first tree.

The man who constantly uses a horse and does not teach him some useful lesson neglects one of his chief opportunities for making a horse a valuable servant. Horses can easily be taught to obey promptly ordinary words of command, and it takes no extra time and but little trouble, and should be so taught. It is annoying—particularly when there is no need for it—to have a horse that won't stand even to road wagons unless the driver has hold of the reins; that will not be caught without a chase or bringing up all the horses on the farm, is hard to handle, is habitually impatient in standing and starting.

ANDOVER.

From Colorado Springs. Extract from a letter of Mrs. Martha Knight, sister of H. D. Abbott, Esq., who is visiting her niece, Mrs. Chas. Plummer, Idaho Springs, Colorado, she writes: "In regard to the springs, they say the water is good for all stomach, liver and kidney troubles. People come here from all the states from Maine to California. The cold spring is about five minutes' walk from the house. It comes out of the mountain side and is very cold.

A walk of five minutes around that mountain to the other side and there is a hot spring; the water is the same in both, charged with soda and iron. The pebbles at the bottom are covered with iron rust. If you make lemonade of the water it foams like the soda you get at a soda fountain in the city.

Every one speaks to you and you chat a few minutes; you may not see them again. At first it seemed strange to me (who came from Puritanic old Boston) but have gotten quite used to it now. Then the Trocadero is there (it is a Spanish word meaning a place of amusement.)

The most wonderful thing of all is the cave where people take hot baths for rheumatism. There is a little low building with two rooms. You pass through one of those and find a tunnel fifty feet long blowing out of solid rock. The attendant carries a candle. At the end of the tunnel you come to a bath tub hewn out of stone, into which the hot water flows and runs out of all the time. The atmosphere is so warm that the perspiration starts the moment you enter the place. If you bathe, you must put one foot in and take it out in a foot bath, until you get used to the heat. The tub is about three feet high and five feet long. People go in on crutches and come out without using them.

The story here is that the spring was found by miners who took up a claim and it became too hot to work it. Last Sunday (Apr. 26) we had two feet of snow in the morning. At night it had disappeared. Today (May 1) it thundered, lightened and rained, but the sun is out now.

Grange Field Day.

June 11th, Lone Mt. Grange celebrated field day at Olney Burgess' grove, East Andover. Committee, Mr. and Mrs. Llewellyn Hall, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Cushman, Dining room committee, Mrs. W. W. Perkins, Mrs. J. L. Merrill, George Abbott, Mrs. L. C. Akers, Mrs. Fred Thomas, Arthur Philbrick. About one hundred and fifty took dinner, after which was an entertainment. Recitations by Irma Perkins, Sadie Bailey, Elizabeth Cushman, Winnie Francis. Music by Mrs. Henry Thomas, Elwin Talbot, Irma Perkins. Toasts—Andover Grange, responded to by Master John L. Bailey. Why celebrate Andover's Centennial, by Olcott Poor. Andover in the Past, Philip Hoyt. Tribute to the Ladies for Entertainment and Andover Band, Rev. Samuel Holden.

Andover Band was in attendance and furnished music. We were surprised to hear such music from the practise of a few weeks. We appreciate the efforts of the leader, Mr. Burgess, in his efforts to get together such a large number of musicians and to meet every week for practice. We hope the citizens will realize that all this costs time and money and will render all the assistance possible when opportunity presents itself.

The boys had a game of base ball and everybody had a fine time. Many thanks are due Mr. and Mrs. Burgess, who spared no pains to make it a success.

CARD OF THANKS.

To those friends who so thoughtfully assisted us in our great bereavement, to the several orders who participated in the last sad rites to the dead; and to all who so generously contributed flowers; we wish to express our heart-felt thanks.

MR. LEWIS M. MANN.
MR. EDWIN J. MANN.
MR. AND MRS. FRANK L. WILLIS.
West Paris, June 22, 1904.

WEST PARIS.

Arthur L. Mann.

It is with deep regret that we chronicle the death of Arthur L. Mann, who died Saturday morning, June 18, after a very short illness of only one week. He had a very high fever called malarial typhoid. Arthur was a promising young man of scarce 28 years, and among the last thought to be claimed by the death messenger. How forcibly we are reminded by this fact that life is surely uncertain, and we little know who will be called for next.

The funeral was held at his late home, Monday, at 1.30, attended by Rev. D. F. Nelson, who took for his text "A choice young man," found in I Sam. "He was highly commended and very capable in all business relations." "He was companionable and had many friends." "He found time to attend church." He was a member of the order of Masons, I. O. O. F., Rebekah degree lodge and Star in the East, each of which attended the body. He was also a Cuban war soldier.

The burial was under the Masons' order of service, who accompanied the friends to Pine Grove cemetery, Norway, for his last resting place. He leaves a grief-stricken wife, father, brother, and aged grandmother. They have the sincere sympathy of the entire community. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. One very large piece said "Our Foreman," from the clothier's factory workmen, and there were other very beautiful pieces from relatives with "Arthur" and "Husband." Each of the orders of which he was a member gave lovely pieces, besides baskets of flowers and bouquets from friends.

Henry Adams was at home over Sunday.

Nelson Stevens of Trap Corner is very poorly, also James Robinson.

Luile Tuell went Wednesday to Newry to visit her cousin, Mrs. Carrie Post.

Murder and Suicide.

At Rumford Falls, Monday night, John Luro shot and killed May Bunnell, then shot himself in the head, inflicting a mortal wound. Luro, aged 26, was infatuated with Miss Bunnell, who was 20. They had a quarrel Sunday evening, and as the girl refused to accept any attentions from him, on Monday evening he fired a shot through her head, killing her instantly. He then put a bullet into his own head. He was taken to the hospital in an unconscious condition.

Luro, whose home is in Orono, had been in Rumford Falls about three years, and had been employed in the Oxford mills, losing his situation a few weeks ago. Miss Bunnell was an estimable and popular young lady who resided with her step-father and sister.

Luro or Laroux as the name is also spelled, died Tuesday morning. He was conscious part of the night but did not make any statement in regard to the shooting.

ANDOVER.

Oxford County Conference.

Once more Oxford conference of churches meet. Once more the hills and valleys were thronged with the faithful and words from these faithful souls. The conference opened at 10.30. Rev. B. S. Rideout of Norway was elected moderator; W. H. Eastman, of Sumner scribe. A good delegation from Bethel, and Rumford and a pastor from each church, with the exception of Gorham and Gilead.

Dinner was served at Union hall where the ladies had everything most acceptable to tempt the appetite.

Conference resumed its session at 1.30. A praise service led by W. H. Eastman, followed by a discussion at 1.45. "Who shall be in the church?" introduced by Rev. Mr. Rideout; 2.20, "Causes and cures for inconstancy in Christian service," by Rev. Mr. Holden; 2.40, "The Religious man as an object of scrutiny," by Rev. F. Newport, Oxford, a fine address.

At 3.15, The Maine Missionary Society was represented by Rev. Chas. Harbutt, who said it was impossible in the limited time to give an idea of the work compassed by this society. He urged more interest and work in the churches for this noble cause.

Supper was served at the hall.

Conference assembled at 7.30 and listened to an address by Augustine Ohol, an educated Hindoo, who appeared in his native costume. A solo by Elwin Talbot, anthem by the choir, address by Rev. John M. Gould of Portland, on Foreign Missions. His daughter, went as missionary ten years ago to China. She was murdered by the Boxers. He is supporting a young lady who went in her place.

A collection was taken for the conference, Wednesday afternoon. The ministers attended the opening exercises of the High school. Remarks by Rev. Rideout on his trip to Washington.

At 9.15, conference assembled at the church. Treasurer's report by moderator. Reports of churches. Very encouraging reports from Mexico and 2d church, Norway. Discussion, "The kind of layman I like," opened by Rev. Dr. Brooks, "The kind of minister I like," by R. T. Parker, Rumford Falls. Sermon by Rev. C. L. Parker, Ridlonville, text, St. Mark, 14:15.
